

TROY PILLOW SCULPTURE

Title: Zenith

Materials: Cor-ten Steel

Scale: 18'- 20' height 18' diameter

Zenith is a sculpture that celebrates the landscape of the high desert. Soaring peaks and meandering rivers are but two natural attractions that draw people from near and far to enjoy what Bend has to offer. Whether you like summiting a peak or drifting down a river and everything in-between, you can find it here.

The three-piece composition represents the mountains while the graceful flowing outer edge represents the flowing streams and rivers. The three-element configuration of the design is geometrical in layout, providing changing views as one moves and experiences the sculpture. The peaks are varying in height, breaking the symmetry of the three elements. The slight inward angle creates a sense of rising movement. The cor-ten material compliments the materials used in the park infrastructure such as the bridges and buildings.

Combining organic materials and natural finishes with simple shapes, allows "Zenith" to have a symbiotic relationship with its surroundings while creating a monolithic presence that reminds us that exploring the natural world brings a connection with nature and a sense of enlightenment.
